

Introduction:

The goal of this project was to find an advertisement and then attempt to re-create the image using HTML and CSS. I found an ad in a newspaper that I didn't think would be too difficult and then ran with it.

Narrative:

The first thing I did in this project was to find an advertisement that wouldn't be too difficult. I found a relatively simple ad from Columbus Odd Jobs. The next thing I did was make a div container that would hold the entire ad. I then gave this div a black background. Next, I went to the company website and got the logo. I then positioned the logo relative to the top left corner of the background div. Then I got to work on the orange text that says "Residential & Commercial." I positioned this absolute to be different from the rest of the positioning. Then I went on to the middle section and lower section. These sections were easy since they had very little editing and not much text.

Reflection:

This project was not too bad, but there were some challenges especially getting the absolute positioned div to not condense into a third line when the window got too small. To fix this I just had to set the minimum width of the div to 300, so the text would always fit in the box no matter how small the window got.

HTML:
